Medical Interpreting: Meeting the Standard of Care W/S#1

As the population ages, we find more and more work in the medical arena. This work has always been there, but the spreading awareness of and on-going advocacy around the Americans with Disabilities Act has expanded this arena even more! The new CPC recognizes the need to "do no harm," as well our role as a medical team member. Our "bedside manner," our professionalism, and role as the "attending interpreter" demand ongoing training as part of being a "practice profession." Background information, vocabulary, approaches, and case studies will be included. Audience participation is expected.

Religious Interpreting: A Call to Excellence W/S#2

There is a long and noble history of religious workers being one group in the triune of the genesis of Sign Language Interpreters world wide. However, the arena of religious interpreting has largely gone ignored by the profession. The reasons for this may be due to the traditional separation of church and state and the unique governance structure of the various religions and their denominations. However, no arena can be more important than the health of the soul and the human spirit. Being led to this arena, one must also be led to excellence of service delivery. This requires on-going education not only in interpreting, but the religious tenets one interprets.
